Fund review

The STANLIB Extra Income Fund ended the quarter with R12.9 billion under management. The fund's weighted average life remained conservative at below two years, with a modified duration of 0.11 years. As rates are now expected to be higher for longer, we are investing in longer-dated floating rate instruments to optimise the yield of the fund, given the current economic environment. The positioning of the fund limits interest rate risk to support our interest rate view.

Market overview

The South African Reserve Bank (SARB)'s Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) kept the repo rate stable at 8.25% at its January and March meetings. At both meetings the decision was unanimous. An upside risk to inflation resulted in a hawkish tone from the MPC at the March meeting. Consumer inflation rose more than expected in February, due to large increases in the cost of medical insurance and higher fuel prices.

Increases in administered costs like medical aid, energy and water cannot be controlled by higher interest rates. Arguably, the SARB may have to accept that anchoring inflation around its 4.5% target is impossible and find a way to cut interest rates, or risk triggering a recession.

The SARB remains cautious about inflation expectations. It recognises that the ability to absorb unforeseen shocks may be limited if these expectations persist at elevated levels. Upside risks to food prices from recent hot and dry weather were highlighted at the latest MPC meeting, while the weaker rand poses further risks, particularly as expectations for rate cuts in advanced economies are being pushed further out.

While the SARB, in principle, does not have to wait for the global banks to move on interest rates, the domestic inflation outlook needs to improve markedly to make it embark on a cutting cycle before the Fed does. The global "higher for longer" narrative increases the risk that the first repo rate cut could be postponed to later in the year, especially if local inflation expectations remain sticky.

The SARB's growth expectations are unchanged for the year. GDP growth is seen at 1.2% in 2024. Revisions were made to the SARB's 2024 inflation projection: it now expects inflation to be 5.1% for 2024 from 5% previously.

The forward rate agreement (FRA) curve is pricing in the "higher for longer" view as well, with a slight chance of the first rate cut for the year only happening in September and a higher probability that the first cut might now only happen in November. Currently only a 25bps cut is priced in for the rest of 2024.

South African short-term rates traded sideways for the quarter, with three-month JIBAR moving down five bps from 8.4% to 8.35%. The 12-month JIBAR rate traded flat at 9.13% throughout the quarter. Demand for longer-dated Treasury Bills picked up, which pushed the 12-month Treasury Bill yield to 8.68% from 9.18% previously. The three-month Treasury Bill traded sideways, ending at 8.66% from 8.62% in December.

Looking ahead

We continue to expect that the SARB will only start its rate cutting cycle in September, but uncertainty remains high. The SARB's main focus remains on returning CPI inflation to the midpoint of the inflation target at 4.5% and maintaining it around that level, before starting to cut rates. If further upside risks to the inflation outlook materialise, and food prices may be the biggest risk, rate cutting could start later than we expect.
